Unbreakable: My Story, My Way

Synopsis

A New York Times bestseller, this is the official biography from the beloved Mexican-American singer who lost her life in a tragic plane crash. The only autobiography authorized by Jenni Rivera "I can't get caught up in the negative because that destroys you. Perhaps trying to move away from my problems and focus on the positive is the best I can do. I am a woman like any other, and ugly things happen to me like any other woman. The number of times I have fallen down is the number of times I have gotten up." These are the last words that beloved Mexican American singer Jenni Rivera spoke publicly before boarding the plane that would crash and cut her life short on December 9, 2012. However, they are not the final words that La Diva de la Banda had for the world. Those are found in the pages you hold in your hands, Jenni's own account of the highs and lows of her extraordinary journey. She became the most acclaimed Spanish-language singer in the United States and sold more than 15 million records worldwide. A single mother of five and grandmother of two, she was also an actress, a television producer, the star of her own reality show, and an entrepreneur. But for all its immense success, Jenni's life often seemed to be a series of personal battles in which perseverance was her only weapon. As her fame grew, she made it her mission to speak about her struggles, forging an intimate connection with her fans. She became a figure of strength and a source of encouragement to women of all ages. In Unbreakable, Jenni recounts the crucial moments in her past, revealing her experiences with domestic and sexual abuse, divorce, body image issues, making her way in a male-dominated industry, raising her children as a single mother, and learning that she could depend only on herself. Though she is no longer with us, Jenni will always be the "Rivera rebel from Long Beach," the girl who maintained her sense of humor and fighting spirit in every circumstance. In this remarkable memoir, Jenni leaves behind a legacy of inspiration and determination that will forever live on through her precious family, friends, and fans.

Winner of fifteen gold records, fifteen platinum records, and five double platinum records, with more than fifteen million records sold in all, Jenni Rivera (1969 – 2012) was one of her or any generation's most popular and in-demand artists, not only in Mexico but also in the United States, selling out performances at such prestigious venues as the Staples Center, the Kodak Theatre, the Nokia Theatre, the Gibson Amphitheatre. In Mexico, she held a sellout performance at the Auditorio Nacional and performed a concert for 80,000 people in Querétaro. Jenni was also one of the decade's most award-winning artists. In 2009, she earned a record-breaking eleven Billboard Award nominations, becoming the first female regional Mexican performer to be so honored.

Unbreakable 2> 2> Ahora estoy, entre luces hermosas mas cuando estaba sola, sé que Dios me cuida. (Now I am among the beautiful lights, but when I was alone, it was God who took care of me.) "Mariposa de Barrio" Sunday, January 26, 1997 The night began at El Farallon, a popular nightclub in Lynwood, California. El Farallon was where you went to hang out with your friends and get lost in the music, forgetting everything else for just a few hours. It was where I met Juan López, my second husband, after locking eyes with him across the dance floor. Most important, it was where many regional Mexican singers launched their careers. And it was where I decided to shoot my first music video, for my song "La Chacalosa" (The Jackal Woman). My father had done business with the owner of El Farallon, Emilio Franco. Franco said we could shoot the video before the doors opened at 9:00 p.m. At the time, my dad, known to many as Don Pedro Rivera, was one of the biggest producers of regional Mexican music. He had always been my biggest supporter, especially in those early days when I was struggling to break out. He had plans to buy commercial airtime for this video to promote "La Chacalosa." I wasn't making much money with my music. It was difficult to get my songs on the radio because I refused to fit into the mold of the typical Latina singer. I should have been younger, thinner, softer, quieter, dumber. In the Latino community, female singers were supposed to be beautiful and superskinny, and their music was supposed to be silly. Latina singers were meant to be looked at and not really heard. But I wasn't eye candy. I was considered overweight. I was considered not to have vocal talent. And I was singing strong, ballsy corridos (folk tales, often involving drug dealers). I probably intimidated the men. No other women were singing corridos. It was like a woman rapping. Women weren't thought to be tough enough, or real enough, to be singing about the gritty world of drug dealers. The people in the industry tried to make me change. If you want to make it in this genre, they said, you have to do this or that. A lot of women had to do sexual favors to get played on the radio. Fuck that. I wouldn't do it. I wanted to make it based on my talent or not at all. At the time we shot the video for "La Chacalosa," I was working as a Realtor to support my three children and myself. Music was secondary. Juan Lfpez, the man I later married, was serving a seven-month prison sentence after being charged with smuggling immigrants. He was set to be released in three weeks. Because I didn't want to be alone, my sister, Rosie, and her friend Gladyz came with me when I would go out at night for a music gig. On this night they sat in the nearly empty club watching me do several takes of the song. I thought we would be done by nine, but by the time we finished taping at around nine thirty, a few customers had started to trickle into the bar area. Before we left I went to the ladies' room. As I exited the restroom, a man grabbed my right arm to make sure he had my attention. "Aren't you El Cinco's lady?" he said. El Cinco (The Five) was Juan Lfpez's nickname. I distinctly remember looking into this man's green eyes as he tugged roughly at my arm. He was making me upset and he knew it. "Leave me the fuck alone," I told him as I broke away, wondering how he knew Juan and why he cared if I was Juan's lady. I picked up my things and walked out of the club with Rosie and Gladyz. I was in a bit of a rush because they were both still in high school, and this was a school night. I wanted to get them home as quickly as possible so we wouldn't get in trouble and they would be allowed to hang out with me whenever they wanted. I was never one to have many friends, especially since Juan scared many of them away with his temper and his rude behavior. Now that he was incarcerated, I was a loner. Hanging out with the girls was fun and helped keep me busy until his release. First I dropped Gladyz off at her house on Walnut Avenue in North Long Beach, then I dropped Rosie off at our parents' house on Ellis Street, just a few blocks away. It was only 10:30, so we were in the clear. Once I made sure Rosie was in the house, I turned up the music and began the drive back home. I was living in beautiful, gangsteriffic Compton. Being a Realtor, I had bought a house there as an investment and decided to live in it for a while. It wasn't the best neighborhood, but I was happy to have a place to call my own. I couldn't wait to get to my bed that night. I was singing along to my all-time favorite CD, 15

ÃfÃ xitos, by Marisela, as I drove down the 91 freeway west. As I exited right onto Central Avenue, I noticed the car behind me flashing its high beams. It got closer and closer as I slowed down to see if I knew who it was. I didnÃ¢ recognize the small white sports car and I couldnÃ¢ see who was driving. The driver flashed his high beams again. What the fuck? Was I driving too slow? Did I forget to turn on my signal? Suddenly, the car sped up alongside my green Ford Explorer, purposely trying to sideswipe me. ThatÃ¢s when I realized not just one but three men were in the car, and I started to get scared. I sped up, hoping that they were just messing around with me. They werenÃ¢. They would drive behind me, then speed up and try to run me off the road and into the parked cars on Central Avenue. Ã¢“Shit. What the hell am I going to do?Ã¢ I said to myself. I was approaching my house on Keene Avenue and didnÃ¢ want these men to know where I lived. I was living alone with my three young children. Our house had been broken into just two months earlier, and everything had been stolen. ThatÃ¢s how the neighbors had found out that my husband was locked up and wasnÃ¢ there to protect us. All of this was running through my mind as I kept driving around the block, hoping these guys would magically disappear. My whole body was shaking. Finally, I stopped close to my house, though not in front of it. Ã¢“Maybe theyÃ¢ll just leave,Ã¢ I kept saying to myself. How foolish. Their car stopped behind me and I could see that the men were ready to step out. I didnÃ¢ know what to do, and fear took over. I decided that I would make a run for it. I would run as fast as I could, the way my brothers had taught me to when we played baseball as kids. I opened my car door and started sprinting in my high heels, screaming at the top of my lungs. I did not look back. I could hear the sound of their boots running after me. I ran, I screamed louder. I cried. I prayed that someone would hear me. If they did, nobody came to my rescue. The boot steps were gaining on me. My high heels were slowing me down. Suddenly I felt two pairs of strong arms grab me. I had been caught. I tried to fight back. I kicked and screamed. I wasnÃ¢ going out easy. I was the gangsta bitch from Long Beach. The Rivera rebel who never lost a fight. But I was outnumbered. One man had stayed in the car. One covered my mouth with his huge hand. One dragged me by the hair and pulled at my arms until I was thrown in the backseat of the car. ThatÃ¢s when I saw those green eyes again. The prominent chin. The man from the club. He raped me in the backseat of the vehicle. Over and over he repeated the words I had said to him at the club: Ã¢“Leave me the fuck alone. Leave me the fuck alone.Ã¢ He mocked me as he raped me. As the tears streamed down my face, I decided not to fight back anymore. All I could think about was my kids. I was so afraid that I was going to be killed and they would be left without a mother. Maybe the men would let me live if I Ã¢“behaved.Ã¢ I felt that I was losing myself. I could feel the strength seeping out of my body and mind. I was afraid that they were going to take turns on me, but when the man was finished, he told his friend, "Throw this bitch out my car." I silently thanked God as I was slammed onto the sidewalk, realizing that it was finally over. But the damage was done. I sat on the curb, numb. I couldn't cry. I was just relieved to be alive. I vowed that I would never tell anyone of my shame. They say that when you keep a secret, it eats you up inside, but I felt that it was better that way. I wanted to appear strong in front of my children and my family. I didn't want anybody to know. And I wanted to maintain my persona as Jenni, the Rivera rebel who had never lost a fight. But deep down inside I knew I had lost a piece of myself that I would never recover. My soul had been shattered, but to the outside world I did just as I had been taught since I was a little girl: I kept my head up and continued forward. It is, after all, the Rivera way.

I knew nothing of this artist outside of learning the news of her tragic early death, and her impact on her fans and her community at large, which is what led me to purchase the book personally to find out why she was such an important figure in her community. Filled with cautionary tales (as well as successes) that young people can relate to and benefit from Rivera's conventional wisdom (earned, unfortunately, by her experiences), the book is well written and accessible to a young audience. I read it over a weekend. After reading the book, I purchased another copy and donated both copies to my local library because I found Rivera's stories to be very helpful to young people. The greatest community service offered to all communities at large, not just the Mexican American community, is Rivera's detailed account of learning of and dealing with the emotional, psychological and legal consequences of confronting sexual abuse. This alone makes this book a most important read, giving hope (and realistic expectations) to others who have experienced such a horrific violation of one's basic human rights. I can also see this to be very instructional to teachers, parents, social workers and judges who have the task of presiding over such horrific cases. Reading the book also led me to listen to her body of work, and reading the lyrics to her songs, knowing her life story, I can understand why she remains a deeply beloved figure in her community.

I never really knew Jenni but was a fan of her latest CD. Having read her biography brought upon a whole new meaning for her as a Woman, Mother, Daughter, Sister and Survivor. Jenni was called upon early in life to be one of God's Angels. After reading her book and reviewing the media attention before and after her death, it all came to its fruition. The reality of who Jenni Rivera really is. I think we all know a Jenni in our lives and whether we accept her or not, one thing is for sure...

Real People Who Love Unconditionally Will Always Be Envied For Possessing A Quality They Simply Want. We all know them as "haters", Jenni epitomized Isaiah 54:17. I love, respect, and admire her for her courage and passion to love and to be loved. This is a must read to understand and appreciate her legacy. I laughed and I cried but it was all worth it! Great Autobiography!

I love love love this book because it takes you on a journey of a woman who had many hardships in life but never gave up on herself or her children. I truly respect her for everything she went through. Throughout it all she managed to live life to the fullest and come to terms with stuff that happened. The only thing that I was sadden about was the ending. Throughout the book she reveals many deep secrets and events about her life that were very very sad and horrific, from her rape to her sister and kids being raped by her first husband. But she couldn't mention the reason why her and Esteban divorced. I mean those who really know about Jenni's life know the real reason why they split. We all know her family wrote the last chapter or altered it and did not want to expose the real reason because they wanted to protect a certain "Family Member". Anyways they should have just left out sections of the last chapter. If they want to be 100% real then be 100% real and tell the whole truth. All in all this is a great book for anyone to read.

I loved this book. I feel sad that I did not become a fan until after her death. The fact that this book was here for people like me to learn and love the person and artist that Jenni Rivera was is truly a great gift. If only the good die young, then there is angel in heaven with the name Jenni Rivera! The book is well written. Very emotional and inspiring. Everyone should read it

Has to be my favorite book ! I was really into her show and still follow her kids on Instagram via social media. I guess you can say you get to see Jenni on a whole other level.. This truly helps you understand why she was the way she was. You get to see what it was like before her fame, before the kids, before her family drama. The book goes as far as marrying Esteban and her life with him.. I would definitely recommend this !

This is a must read. I couldn't put this book down. I think it was a story well told. I of course did not know Jenni personally but the way the story was written - her way - made me feel like I was chilling out with her in her home talking over coffee. She definitely experienced more than her fair share of heartache in her lifetime, but I think that is what made her who she is and if she had a choice in the matter, I don't think she would have had it any other way. I'm only left questioning why she would be okay with any of her children having any relationship whatsoever with Trino, and what really was it that went wrong in her relationship with Esteban, so bad that she didn't even want to write about it? In any case, there's no doubt about it- this woman was determined, courageous and above all a great mother who would stop at nothing to provide for her children and in my eyes that goes a long way. My heart goes out to her family.

I purchased this book not only because it is Jenni Rivera but because I wanted to read more of the life of her and know who she is and more I recommend this book for any one that wants to be inspired to find a way to change your life because reading Jenni's life is amazing how much she suffered and still never gave up and that is a way for a woman not to never let herself down by anyone because we women are strong and we can be independent..... I laughed and cried while reading her story and I can read it over and over like it was my first time reading it... Jenni we miss you and love you were ever you are #Jennivive #Junit #J9093
