lovely book by a good artist. thank you

This book is for a Christmas gift, and was a difficult book to locate as the local stores did not have it and could not order it. Fortunately it was available through and at a very good price. The budding artist will certainly be happy when she opens it on Christmas.

The author works from life and covers most the kinds of things you'd want to know about successful portraiture. The step-by-step was most interesting to read as she takes you through a process and how to resolve some issues you may run into. It doesn't offer a lot to beginners because she assumes you know how to see and do basic drawing and toning. I'd say this is a book for the intermediate artist who needs to reenforce existing knowledge with some very useful tips you probably never thought of, particularly for drawing from life. I only have a few small critical things to say here. Although she reviews some basics on composition such as the golden ratio, she doesn't actually seem to practice them much in her examples. For example, she shows you how to "center" the head and says the "full face" portrait is the most common. Well I've heard alot of arguments against centering and full face views so it seems a contradiction to talk composition then not practice it in reality. I believe the 3 quarter view is most common, and you do not want to center the head for reasons I can't give here because it is too detailed. But perhaps she didn't want to overload the reader with composition theory since that's a much more complex issue. But this is very worthwhile to read and she seems to have done a great job with the structure and language of the book.

A terrific book by a master of probably the most demanding of artistic disciplines. I expect to learn a lot from it, and of course, knowledge is priceless.

Great book with techniques that the masters used and helpful tips for any portrait artist. Especially useful for the artist looking to expand their skills in portrait drawing.

Excellent book for instruction.

You learn a little

Great artist and great instruction.
